Women's Liberation

Sweet sixteen is a wonderful age for a girl to be. The world is almost hers for the asking. And she is certain she knows how to cure its ills. So Janice walked into the living room to tell her mother the good news.

"They are forming a chapter of the Women's Liberation Society in our school. They have asked me to be the president. And you can join. Just think of it! Now we women will be liberated. Never again will our sex be the slaves of men."

"I don't think I get it," sighed Mrs. Handley. "You aren't the slave of any male. John works every day of the week to have money to take you out. Bob helps his father so he can have the car when you want to go riding. Sam is saving all his money so he can take you to that big affair. Seems to me they are your slaves."

"Mother, don't be silly. You don't want to be a slave," said her daughter. "You have your rights."

"Does that mean I will no longer have to take care of your room. Does that mean I will not have to make that dress for you? Does that mean I will not have to bake and cook when you have the girls over next week?"

"Not that, mother," said Janice as she realized that there could be another angle to this slavery of the female. "You just sign the application."

"I absolutely refuse to sign it or have anything to do with that movement," said mother in a firm tone of voice.

"Give me one good reason for your refusal," challenged Janice.

"I'm afraid of your father," was the reply. "That's all."

The Burglars

It is the queen of all social resorts. You have to be a millionaire several times over and come from the best family to either buy or rent a place there. They say that they even give you a blood test to see if you are a "blue-blood." If you aren't in good standing in the Social Register, you can't get within a mile of the place.

But there is an exception to that last statement. Seems that a thief managed to do it. And he had managed to burglarize several homes. The Van Vanmers were among the leaders in this community.

"I am going to have ten burglar alarms installed in my homes," Mr. Van Vanmer told the Chief of Police. "Latest alarms on the market. Made Made in France. Flying them across the Atlantic in my private plane."

When the alarms arrived, three electricians went to work to install them. Took two days to do the job. But Mr. Van Vanmer was contented.

"Now I defy any burglar in the world to get into our home and steal anything."

The newspapers gave it publicity for a day. Then turned to something else. Suddenly the Chief of Police got an emergency phone message from Mr. Van Vanmer.

"Some dirty crooks burglarized my home," he was told.

"Get your wife's diamonds?" asked the law official.

"No," was the reply with a sigh. "But keep it a secret. They stole the ten burglar alarms."

Three Dogs

When dog owners get together, they often like to boast about the abilities of their canine pets. You have seen the little boy, who says with pride to his dog: "Fido, stand on your hind legs only." These three men who met one day in the park were strangers. But they had their dogs with them. And so the boasting began.

"I am a physician," said the first man. I am going to show you what my dog can do. Listen carefully to me, Stethoscope. I want you to take my pulse."

So the dog put one paw on his master's arm. And then he barked exactly 78 tunes. And with pride the M.D. said to the others, "What a wonderful dog I have. What can your dogs do? You can understand why my dog has a solid gold collar."

The second owner announced that he was a certified public accountant. He took out 12 dog biscuits from his pocket and placed them on the ground.

"Listen to me, Ledger," he said to his dog. "Count the biscuits and then move one to the side."

The dog barked 12 times and with his paw moved one biscuit away from the others.

"That's why my dog is wearing a silver medal," he said to the other two men.

"I'm just a crook at heart," said the third man, "Hey, Criminal, go into action."

The third dog ate up the twelve biscuits, grabbed the gold collar from one dog, and the silver medal from the other dog. And both he and his master ran away with the loot.

This free booklet tells you how you can break into Computer Programming 23,000 more programmers needed each year...get your basic training now!

...by training at home. Also FREE: Interesting sample lesson for you to try. No obligation.

Why don't you prepare for a career in programming? All it takes to start your training is a high school education and a logical mind. No machines are involved because a programmer does not operate machines. He writes the programs that tell the computers what to do.

Programmers are to be found in many types of business—in manufacturing, banks, department stores, communications, transportation, utilities. Trainees begin at good pay, and with the right background and experience can rise to fill supervisory positions at upper-level salaries.

Instead of worrying about how long your present job is going to last, you can plan for a bigger future in a growth field. Continuing expansion in the years ahead may result in more openings for computer programmers than there will be people to fill them!

Right now, without leaving your present job, you can prepare for a trainee position in computer programming. A position that may open up many opportunities for you—in the exciting world of tomorrow.

You can study computer programming with LaSalle at home, in your spare time. Experienced LaSalle instructors will teach you by mail—correct and grade your lesson assignments. You will receive basic instruction in the nature, hardware, vocabulary, equipment and techniques of computer programming.

Send for free sample lesson and fascinating booklet "Beginning Your Career in Computer Programming." In simple, non-technical language this booklet tells you what computer programming is; what the programmer does; and how you can get your basic training in your spare time. LaSalle, 417 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois 60605.
